Board Decides That Such Mutilation of Periodicals Must Be Stopped.

that periodicals were being frequently mutilated caused some discussion last evening's meeting of the Library

Mr. Sykes displayed a copy of a leading London magazine with the Morton. entire center of a page cut out. Strongly denouncing this practice, Mr. Sykes declared that it "plainly indicated the instincts of a thief." The chairman, Mr. Roy Fleming, did not appear quite so vehement, particularly when he pointed out that the "lifted" extract was only a picture of Maurice Chevalier, idol of nearly every "flapper." Accordingly it was charitably presumed that the latest act of "vandalism" was perpetrated in Knights of Columbus Hall, Laurier by a Chevalier "fan" and that the avenue, in aid of the Monastery of picture of Maurice presides over the Precious Blood, Echo Drive. THE BEASTS OF TARZAN

In the cabin that had belonged to the Russian there ticked on and on through the silences of the night that little mechanism in the small black box which held for the unconscious sleepers the coming vengeance of the last of Tarzan's enemies. Tick . . tick . . tick . with apparently unending monotony. Yet second by second a little arm on one of the wheels came nearer its goal upon the dial beside the clockworks.

Shortly after the break of day Tarzan was on deck, noting the conditions of the weather. The wind had abated. The sky was cloudless. Every condition seemed ideal for the commencement of the return voyage to Jungle Island, where the beasts were to be left. And then-home! The ape-man roused the mate and gave instructions that the Kincaid sail at the earliest possible moment.

Lord Greystoke's assurance that they would not be prosecuted for their share in the villainies of the two Russians, hastened with cheerful alacrity to their several duties. The beasts, liberated from the confinement of the hold, wandered about the deck much to the discomfiture of the
